
Randall Balmer is the John Phillips Professor in Religion and director of the Society of Fellows at Dartmouth College. An Episcopal priest, he is the author of more than a dozen books, including Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory: A Journey into the Evangelical Subculture in America, now in its fifth edition, and Redeemer: The Life of Jimmy Carter. His op-eds appear in the Los Angeles Times, the Des Moines Register and newspapers across the country.

David Campbell is the Packey J. Dee Professor of American Democracy at the University of Notre Dame and the chairperson of the political science department. His most recent book is Seeking the Promised Land: Mormons and American Politics (with John Green and Quin Monson). He is also the co-author (with Robert Putnam) of American Grace: How Religion Divides and Unites Us, which has been described by the New York Times as intellectually powerful and by the San Francisco Chronicle as the most successfully argued sociological study of American religion in more than half a century. As an expert on religion, politics, and civic engagement, Professor Campbell has often been featured in the national media, including the New York Times, The Economist, USA Today, The Washington Post, The Wall Street Journal, Time, NBC News, CNN, NPR, Fox News, and C-SPAN.

Matthew J. Franck is the Director of the William E. and Carol G. Simon Center on Religion and the Constitution at the Witherspoon Institute in Princeton, New Jersey. He is Professor Emeritus of Political Science at Radford University, in Radford, Virginia, where he taught constitutional law, American politics, and political philosophy from 1989 to 2010, and was Chairman of the Department of Political Science from 1995 to 2010. He is also currently a Visiting Lecturer in Politics at Princeton University.

Franck earned his B.A. in political science from Virginia Wesleyan College, and his M.A. and Ph.D. from Northern Illinois University. He was a Henry J. Salvatori Fellow at the Heritage Foundation in 1993. J. William Fulbright Professor of American Studies in 1998 at the Graduate School of International Studies, Yonsei University, Seoul, Korea, and a Visiting Fellow in the James Madison Program in American Ideals and Institutions at Princeton University, 2008-09.

He is the author of Against the Imperial Judiciary: The Supreme Court vs. the Sovereignty of the People; co-editor with Richard G. Stevens of Sober As a Judge: The Supreme Court and Republican Liberty; and a contributor to several other books. He has published essays and reviews in numerous academic journals, and reviews and commentaries on constitutional and political subjects in such places as the Washington Post, First Things, National Review, the Claremont Review of Books, Public Discourse, National Affairs, and The New Atlantis. Franck blogs at NRO’s “Bench Memos” and at the “First Thoughts” blog at First Things, and has appeared numerous times on Bill Bennett’s “Morning in America” radio show, as well as on CNN, Fox, and NPR.

Naomi Riley is a weekly columnist for the New York Post and a former Wall Street Journal editor and writer whose work focuses on higher education, religion, philanthropy and culture. She is the author of many books, most recently, Got Religion?: How Churches, Mosques, and Synagogues Can Bring Young People Back (Templeton Press, 2014) and Opportunity and Hope: Transforming Children’s Lives through Scholarships (Rowman & Littlefield, 2014).

Ms. Riley's writings have appeared in the Wall Street Journal, the New York Times, the Boston Globe, the LA Times, and the Washington Post, among other publications. She appears regularly on Fox News. She is the co-editor of Acculturated (Templeton Press, 2010), a book of essays on pop culture and virtue.

She graduated magna cum laude from Harvard University in English and Government. She lives in the suburbs of New York with her husband, Jason, and their three children.

Michael Zuckert is Nancy Reeves Dreux Professor, and Department Chair of Political Science at University of Notre Dame. Professor Zuckert teaches graduate and undergraduate courses in Political Philosophy and Theory, American Political Thought, American Constitutional Law, American Constitutional History, Constitutional Theory, and Philosophy of Law.

Professor Zuckert has published extensively on a variety of topics, including George Orwell, Plato, Shakespeare, and contemporary liberal theory. He is currently finishing a book called Completing the Constitution: The Post–Civil War Amendments. He also was senior scholar for Liberty! (1997), a six-hour public television series on the American Revolution, and served as senior advisor on the PBS series on Benjamin Franklin (2002) and Alexander Hamilton (2007). He is the former head of the Tocqueville Center for the Study of Religion in American Public Life.

Professor Zuckert earned his BA from Cornell University and his PhD from the University of Chicago in 1974.

Ralph Hancock holds a BA from BYU and an MA and PhD from Harvard University, all in political science. Before joining BYU's faculty, Hancock was on the faculty at Hillsdale College and then at the University of Idaho. He has also been a visiting professor at the University of Rennes.

Hancock has been a J. Reuben Clark fellow at BYU. He has taught classes related to American and French political history and, more broadly, classes related to the history of political thought.

Hancock edited America, the West and Liberal Education (Rowman and Littlefield, 1999). He also edited The Legacy of the French Revolution with Gary Lambert and wrote Calvin and the Foundations of Modern Politics (Cornell University Press, 1989). He has also written articles for Square Two, Political Science Reviewer, FARMS Review and First Things, among other publications.

Quin Monson is an Associate Professor of Political Science at Brigham Young University. He received his PhD from the Ohio State University in 2004. Professor Monson’s research and teaching are in public opinion; campaigns, elections, and voting behavior; survey research methods; and religion and politics. He is the co-editor of several books and monographs on congressional and presidential elections, and his research has also appeared in academic journals and edited volumes including Public Opinion Quarterly, Political Research Quarterly, Political Analysis, Presidential Studies Quarterly, and the Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion.