THE FUTURE OF FARMING

UVU Assistant Professor of Social and Behavioral Sciences Matt Comi is passionate about observing how the most minute details can improve and change the practice of farming itself. By listening and spending time with the people in a small town in Wisconsin, Professor Comi and one of his students gained new insights into what the long-practiced tradition of farmwork looks like in a rapidly evolving world.

Dr. Johnson is an associate professor in the Department of Student Leadership and Success Studies. His service-learning and community engagement have focused on helping students from underrepresented communities excel during their first year of college. He has collaborated with various partners, including African refugees, the Utah County Children's Justice Center, the Center for Women and Children in Crisis, Kids on the Move, and local elementary schools and school districts, to create impactful service-learning opportunities. Congrats, Dr. Johnson!

We are thrilled to announce that Utah Valley University will be implementing AwardCo Employee Recognition Software starting this October. This innovative platform is set to revolutionize the way our faculty and staff give and receive professional recognition on campus.
