

WorldQuest Trivia Night.

The WorldQuest trivia night was a fun and engaging chance to both learn, and show off what you know about current events. The trivia was organized into several rounds with each round encompassing a different section of world trivia. There were sections on Global Megacities, Combating Infectious Diseases, Current Events, the EU, Women In Technology, and Peace and Conflict. These questions were in depth and really challenged our knowledge in each of these areas. The competition was friendly and there was a sense of comradery with the fact that everyone present was there with a strong interest in current events. It was quite incredible to see the amount of diversity that was present at Westminster for the event. Even within our own team we had people from at least four separate countries.

While we as the UVU team managed to get several answers right, we were surprised to learn that there was a study guide available for the participants! This would have certainly helped our team since many of the questions contained specific percentages and statistics. Yet even with minimal preparation our team was consistently optimistic and able to have a good time. Most importantly, our team was the only team that was recognizably from a college, especially since we were decked out in Wolverine gear. Although we did not place in the top three cores, win best dressed, or win best team name everyone on the team managed to cooperate well, and have a good time. With knowledge of the study guide in mind, we might even win if we go next year.

Anthony Franks, UVU student