

Noah Farnsworth

Noah was born and raised in American Fork, Utah. Growing up, Noah was heavily involved in sports and music. He decided to fully involve himself in music, which led to four Bands of America National championships with the American Fork High School marching band. He also won numerous awards for solo performances in jazz drum sets and percussive arts. After high school, Noah served a voluntary two-year mission for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Minneapolis, Minnesota. He attributes living in Minnesota and daily interactions with the people as the start of his interest in politics. After his mission, Noah started his college education at UVU, where he is a political science student studying public policy and administration. Noah comes from a family of educators and has a special interest in educational law and education policy. After graduation, he hopes to continue into law school and eventually work in city government as a city manager.
