

Aemish Brock

Aemish Brock is a German-American political science major at Utah Valley University with an emphasis on Global Politics and a minor in Russian Studies. He is the vice president of UVU Foreign Affairs and a member of the Utah International Mountain Forum, UVU Rotaract Club, and the DefTech Initiative. He has a particular interest in international security and intends to pursue a career at an intergovernmental organization with that focus. His academic focus includes German and Eastern European international relations and policy. Drawing on his Bavarian heritage, he maintains a particular interest in German foreign policy, and his time studying post-Soviet politics in Latvia sparked his commitment to supporting democratic development across Eastern Europe. His Bavarian background has also led him to develop a passion for mountain communities, and he actively advocates for greater policy attention towards solving complex mountain issues. Currently, through UVU's student-engaged learning model, he is researching and gaining expertise in sustainable mountain development in the post-Soviet states of Central Asia.
