Service-learning project 2 at UVU

Yet again, just like my first service project during the summer, I did not complete this project at UVU or even in Utah. Over the summer, I decided to move back to my hometown in Arizona. And yet again, I decided to work at our local food shelter. I have to say it was very fulfilling and fun to work at this family food shelter. It was really amazing to see all the dedicated individuals who not only volunteer but also work at the food shelter full-time. Everyone is so kind and welcoming, and there's always a job to do, which I find refreshing. This time around, I did a similar task, helping serve food in both the takeout area and the dine-in area.

Outside of Family Food Center in Arizona.

It was actually amazing to see how many donations they receive from grocery stores. We served a lot of mixed cupcakes, cookies, and other sweet treats. It makes me wonder what kind of foundations set up the donation process and whether it could be enhanced at all. Yet again, as with the first time, it didn't feel right to take photos while I was working; however, this time I recorded a photo of what the food shelter looks like on the outside! Although it's hard to budget time for the first service, it's very rewarding to give back to your community, especially to those in need! I'm looking forward to volunteering here again!

Sophie Jackson – UVU Student